A CREATIVE LOOK TOWARDS GOVERNANCE.

For too long we have seen many people come into youth organisations governance who lack creativity and the motivation to make true and impacting change. It is vital when engaging with young people, professionals and others that we remain true to our identity - we are the British Youth Council, and youthfulness is what we should pride ourselves on. BYC has dynamically been reforming into one of the most recognised entity within the UK for young people. It is young people who are one of the most creative and talented generations. Our generation must capitalise on the technology that surrounds us. We must become more innovative in the way that we lobby governments, in the way we communicate to policy makers and in the way we educate our country on youth affairs.

Coming from a Pakistani background, growing up as a Muslim and being a proud British citizen has given me a varied and open mindset to everything I do. It is through my background, my identity and my cultures that I have been motivated to strive in order to bring about change for young people. I have the enthusiasm, the passion and commitment and the vision to aid the amazing development of this notable organisation.

It is vital that young people who are vulnerable and come from an unequal background are given the true justice and treatment within societies. I was motivated after attending the Equality 4 u day which was held by BYC, that more will be done to recognise this issue of inequality - now it is time to educate and campaign for the various marginalized groups
