

Dear Theresa May, Jeremy Corbyn, Tim Farron, Nicola Sturgeon, Leanne Wood, Paul Nuttall, Caroline Lucas and Jonathan Bartley,

As Britain prepares for a snap general election, we call on you to make a firm commitment to young people across the country.

Since the referendum last year, our organisations have worked to engage young people from every part of the UK and from all backgrounds and political persuasions to present a clear plan for what they want from post-Brexit Britain. Our national research and consultation has given us a strong and consistent picture of the top issues that matter to young people in post-Brexit Britain.

We can show you that younger generations are united on the big issues that will shape their future. Now more than ever, their overwhelming demand to be part of the political process must be acted upon. As the generation that will live longest with the outcome of Britain's withdrawal from the EU, we ask you to recognise that young people can have a positive impact on the Brexit negotiations and give real legitimacy to the process.

This election offers a huge opportunity to reshape the nation's priorities and restore young people's confidence in our democracy. As you put together your platform for the general election, we are calling on all party leaders to make an explicit commitment to represent young people's demands in their upcoming manifestos.

As you all prepare for this election we will all be galvanising our networks to ensure young citizens are engaged and registered to vote.

We are calling on you to give them something to vote for.
